About the Editors

Dirk Richter, PhD, a nurse (with working experience in mental health) and sociologist, is currently researcher and quality manager at Westphalian Hospital in Münster, Germany, and associate professor (Privatdozent) at the Institute of Sociology, University of Münster. In German, he has authored and edited three books on violence in health care. He has co-authored a widely distributed booklet on conflict management in psychiatric settings and has written several research papers and book chapters on the topic. He has also published in fields such as social psychiatry, evaluation and quality management, medical philosophy, nursing science, social theory, and nationalism research. His latest book on the sociology of mental disorders in the era of life sciences was published in 2003 (in German).

Richard Whittington, PhD, is a reader in the School of Health Sciences, University of Liverpool, and an honorary research fellow with the MerseyCare NHS Trust in Liverpool, United Kingdom. He is a psychologist and researcher with a background as a mental health nurse in intensive care and general acute psychiatric settings. He has published widely on psychological and social aspects of violence in both institutional and community settings, with a particular focus on the role of threat and fear in the generation of aggression. Topics include risk assessment, coercive interventions for managing aggression, traumatic and other responses among care staff following assaults, and the provision of workplace counseling services. His other interests include exploration of research methods, international comparisons between mental health services, psychological responses to the diagnosis of physical illness, and self-harm.
