Scenery: from Belorado the landscape becomes greener again. The path to Villafranca ascends imperceptibly to over 900m. Then it goes steeply uphill into the wooded area around Montes de Oca. Moss covered oak trees and thick ferns create a magical atmosphere until the path runs along a broad firebreak.

Walk through Belorado (1). At the end of the village at Río Tirón (picnic area) follow the foot path that runs parallel to the N-120. After the rather monotonous stages walking through cornfields, a broad path now leads to Tosantos (2); 1¼ hrs.) on the left hand side of a stream bed, lush with vegetation. Just before Tosantos you come past an inviting and shady picnic spot to stop for a rest. A little way outside the village (to the north) lies the hermitage, the Ermita de Nuestra Señora de la Peña, with a statue of the Virgin Mary from the 12th century. The route out of Tosantos continues along a leisurely farm track slightly uphill. Although always within hearing distance of the N-120, you are distracted by lovely views of the surrounding countryside, and then you come through Villambistia (3); ½ hr.; bar at the hostel in the village might be open despite different information!), Espinosa del Camino (4); ½ hr.) and Villafranca Montes de Oca (6); ¾ hr.). The remains of San Félix de Oca church (5); 9th century) are passed just before reaching Villafranca).

i Villafranca Montes de Oca is where pilgrims used to recover their energies for the long and dangerous crossing of the Oca mountains (oca means goose), in whose woods robbers and bandits plied their foul work. Villafranca was a bishopric until the seat was transferred to Burgos in 1075. At the end of the 14th century, the Hospital de la Reina (or de San Antonio Abad) was built at the command of Doña Juana Manuel, wife of King Enrique II (Henry II of Trastámara). It is said to have been popular with pilgrims due to large servings of food. In the centre of the village stands the Iglesia de Santiago (originally, Romanesque, end of the 18th century). A baroque statue of St. James inside the church is very striking and so too the font made from a huge St. James shell originating from the Philippines (June 15–Sept. 30, 10–14.00 and 17–20.00).

Already in the village, the ascent onto the Montes de Oca, at first a tough one, then less steep, starts along a hiking path. After about ½ hr., you can take a breather at the small resting place of Fuente Mojapán (7; 1,080m). Legend has it that the pilgrims used to rest here and dunked (mojar) their dry bread (pan) into the spring water. An-other half an hour, this time up a moderate incline, the highest point with an antenna at 1,155m is reached. There's a lovely panoramic view across the extensive forest area. Shortly afterwards you walk along the broad fire-break to the memorial (8) for the Republicans shot in 1936 in the Civil War. The inscription is as follows: 'It was not their deaths, but the manner of their deaths that was senseless. May they rest in peace'. Immediately afterwards a deep ravine forces you into a short but steep descent and ascent. Then continue along a broad forest path. After about 45 mins., the Oasis del Camino offers drinks (and music); 1½ hrs. later, you reach San Juan de Ortega (9).

You reach Tosantes along a broad agricultural track.

i The later canonised Juan de Ortega (1080–1163) was, together with Santo Domingo, the second most important patron of the Way of St. James. Following a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, the student of Santo Domingo retreated into the inhospitable Oca mountains in 1115. In thanks for the miraculous rescue during a storm on the journey back he built Saint Nicholas of Bari the Capilla de San Nicolás. Despite the resistance put up by the Oca mountains bandits, he later opened a pilgrim hostel around which a small monastic community was founded. Just like his role model, Santo Domingo, he improved the Way of St. James by building roads and bridges. In the 15th century the monastery started its decline.

The interior of the Iglesia Monacal (previously a monastery church, 12th–19th century) combines Romanesque, such as the three apses with very beautiful capitals (12th century), and Gothic elements from the 14/15th century, like the tomb of San Juan. The exquisitely worked Gothic baldachin (about 1464) displays scenes from the life of San Juan, such as his pilgrimage to Jerusalem. The sarcophagus containing the remains of the saint is located in a niche to the left, beneath the capital of the column for the Miracle of Light (church daily 10–19.00). At the moment, the monastery complex is being renovated. From March to 7 Nov., you can get more information about the remote monastic settlement at the small Centro de Interpretación.

The Milagro de la Luz, the Miracle of Light, is an architectural masterpiece. On either equinox (March 21 at 18.00, Sept 22 at 19.00, also one or two days before and after), a ray of sunshine falls for a few minutes onto the capital to the left of the altar which depicts the story of Christmas, from the Annunciation to the Epiphany.

A pilgrimage to the church was, for a long time, the last hope of childless women. According to legend, Queen Isabella of Castilla, wife of Fernando of Aragón, brought three children into the world after her visit to San Juan.
